Nominalization of the verb is in demand in colloquial speech:

We know that Slavic Verbal Nouns are poorly and rarely formed from Verbs

with modal or relational semantics

pol. mieć 'to have', móc 'to can', musieć 'to must', woleć 'to want',
rus. иметь 'to have', мочь 'to can',
ukr. мати 'to have', могли 'to can', мусяти 'to must' ets.

with meaning of position in space, permanent properties:

pol. sknerzyć 'be greedy'
rus. окружать 'to surround', граничить 'to border',
ukr. мати 'to have', могли 'to can', мусяти 'to must' ets.

with impersonal meaning:

pol. dzień 'to dawn', dżdżyć 'to rain'
rus. светать 'to light up'
ukr. вечоріти 'to darken'

infrequency of verbs

pol. frapować 'to intrigue', dzień 'to light up'
rus. брести 'to wander', настрополять 'to set up, to customize' ets.

But there are still questions...

Verbal Nouns are less frequently formed from perfective Verbs:

In Russian,
the ratio of Verbal Nouns formed from perfect verbs
to «imperfective» Verbal Nouns is about 1 : 10

In Ukrainian,
the ratio «perfective» Verbal Nouns to «imperfective»
is about 1 : 3

Some perfective Verbs do not form Verbal Nouns

- попеть (два часа) 'sing (for two hours)' → ???*попение??
- попрыгать (немного) 'jump around a little bit' → ???*попрыгание??
- подумать (5 минут) 'think for 5 minutes' → ??? *подумание??
- прождать (3 месяца) 'wait three months' - ?? *прождание??
- пролежать (2 часа) lie in bed all day - ?? *пролежание??
- нагруститься 'brood for too long' → ?? *нагрустение??
- запрыгать 'to start jumping' → ?? *запрыгание??
- дотанцеваться '≈ dance the hell out of' → ?? *дотанцевание??
- переломать (все стулья) '≈ to break all the chairs' → ??

But from other perfective Verbs the Verbal Nouns are formed normally:

- покрасить ‘to paint’ (PFV) → покраска ‘painting’
- погасить ‘to extinguish’ (PFV) → погашение ‘extinguishment’
- прочитать ‘to read’ (PFV) → прочтение ‘reading’
- напечатать ‘to publish’ (PFV) → напечатание ‘publishing’
- завоевать ‘to conquer’ → завоевание ‘conquest’
- отомстить ‘avenge’ (PFV) → отмщение ‘vengeance’
- перегрузить ‘to overload’ (PFV) → перегрузка ‘overloading’

ets.

“we describe with full conviction all forms of the modern lexicon contained in the system, including hypothetical ones” (Saloni, Woliński 2012: 14),

The dictionary “contains rare words, and even words whose uses we have not found, if <...> they are part of regular inflectional oppositions for other words that are stable in the language” (Ibid.: 19)

The Verb Noun with nie / -cie («odstownik») is specified for every (!) verb, and even in cases where there is no such formation in the language. For example, «*pachnienie» 'smelling', «*mienie» 'possession'

* except for the electronic grammatical dictionary compiled by Z. Saloni himself (Saloni, Woliński 2012)). In the authoritative works by J. Puzynina and K. Marzniakowa separately point out that in Modern Polish no deverbatives are formed from the verbs pachnieć, boleć, mieć, musieć, wiedzieć and some others (Puzynina 1969: 30; Marzniakowa 1993: 77).

Polish Verbs with the meaning of the quantitative-temporal limit of action or process

2. Narrowing of verb aspectual semantics

(about 50 lexemes)

e.g. popalić → popalenie

I popalić 1. spalić wiele, jedno po drugim, spalić coś w wielu miejscach,
2. pot. «sparzyć wiele czegoś, sparzyć coś w wielu miejscach»

3. Semantic drift towards substantivity and / or abstractness of meaning

‘During the picnic, a company from Silesia presented a very attractive Eurobangy, which is a device that allows you to jump to a considerable height. Five minutes of such “jumping” cost 10 zlotys’

(8) Ostatnio na sprzedaż w domu aukcyjnym w Teksasie został wystawiony fotel bujany, kiedyś należący do Kennedy'ego. <...> Chociaż za «pobujanie się» na nim trzeba zapłacić ponad 100 tys. dolarów, chętnych do jego kupna nie brakuje [Super Express 2006]

‘A rocking chair that once belonged to Kennedy was put up for auction <...> Although more than 100,000 dollars had to be paid for “rocking” on it, there was no shortage of people willing to buy it...’

4 scenarios could be possible:

- 1) complete absence of such Verbal Nouns in Corpora
- 2) reduction of verb aspectual meanings
- 3) semantic drift towards substantivity
- 4) language play

And what do we have in the living speech?

Linguistic survey:

- informants: students of Polish universities, native speakers
- period: 2024
- format: google form
- number: 26 persons

Four types of tasks

- Can Verbal Nouns be formed from the following verbs (+/-)
- Are there any of the following Verbal Nouns in Polish?
- Write a sentence with the proposed Verbal Nouns
- Continue the sentence using the word in parentheses.

Conclusions

Analysis of corpus data as well as the results of linguistic surveys show that there are certain groups of verbs whose semantics prevents their nominalization.

This is aspectual semantics of quantitative or temporal limit of action, process or states.

In East Slavic languages this is reflected in the vocabulary, while in West Slavic (Polish) it is manifested at the level of usage.

Such Polish Verbal Nouns exist only in the dictionary, but are not living units of speech.

Consequently, they form a real lacuna.

What is the situation in the Czech? It's a plan for the future!
